The past two years have taught us that perseverance – along with hindsight – can help us do our jobs better in the future. In early 2020, projects were hurtling forward at breakneck speed, with cranes dotting skylines, infrastructure work coming on line, and firms having difficulty finding qualified people. Today, the essential work of design and construction remains a significant economic engine, despite negative impacts from COVID, hiring challenges, materials shortages, inflation and lost opportunities for teamwork. But, the future seems bright – especially in Colorado – as we remain busy with productive and exciting pursuits! Please join us for an engaging, interactive and timely presentation on how national and world events have impacted design firms across the spectrum, and how claims and litigation in the post-COVID world have changed forever.
