Austin Huff concentrates his practice in construction and design, real estate, land and mineral rights, and regulatory law. He represents clients in state in federal courts across Colorado, Wyoming, and Idaho, as well as on appeal at the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. Mr. Huff recently relocated from Idaho where he represented individuals and small businesses in a wide variety of consumer law disputes. Previously, he was an attorney with the Wyoming Public Service Commission where he ensured multi-state utility companies abided by relevant statutory and regulatory mandates, worked to resolve disputes, and advised appointed commissioners.

Mr. Huff earned his JD from the University of Wyoming College of Law while also earning a Master's in Environment and Natural Resources from the University of Wyoming Haub School. While in law school, Mr. Huff was named to the Dean's List and he received the Ellbogen International Human Rights Law Scholarship that funded an internship at an human rights organization in Cambodia. He also worked as an intern with the Department of Interior Solicitor's office in Denver, Colorado, and was a student attorney with the University of Wyoming's Natural Resources Clinic and Human Rights Clinic.
